Course Description: We are a mobile society and our students are part of that world. Often the applications that they need to use, and the information needed to use them, are not in the same place! The iPod Touch can be used for more than just listening to music or playing games. This device offers great possibilities as an assistive technology tool. Let the applications and information travel with them, from home to school and class-to-class! Not only is it portable, mobile and accessible, it's cool. With technology advancing faster than most of us can adapt, it is often difficult to see the usefulness of the latest tool on the market. We will review the basics of iTunes navigation, downloading apps and sharing between computers. We will explore applications that assist with communication, allowing the iTouch to be an augmentative communication device. We will have hands on experience with apps that support reading, writing and math, including those that provide support for students with print based disabilities and students who may need visual prompting tools.

Prerequisites: You must have an iTouch that you can bring to class each week. You also need the ability to download free and low-cost apps to the device. Prior to the first class you will need to set up an iTunes account. It must be active to allow for downloading of content.

About the Instructor: Rosey McQuillan is an Assistive Technology specialist for the Wellesley Public Schools. She has successfully provided professional development workshops for Pre-K-12 teachers that demonstrate how to use technology effortlessly across all curriculum areas.
