Course Description: Educators from various disciplines are using digital tools to create engaging "digital stories" in the classroom. In this workshop we will look at the "Hows and Whys" of facilitating digital storytelling projects. Digital storytelling, in the broadest sense, is about weaving together narrative, imagery, voice and music into media-rich videos. We will look at K-12 examples of successful projects in the arts, humanities, languages, and sciences including identity narratives, oral histories, social issue documentaries and presentations of factual content. We will experience the process of creating a digital story from concept to completion, including an exploration of web-based tools such as VoiceThread, Animoto and Apple's popular iMovie. Finally, we will look at various ways teachers can evaluate these projects through process and product rubrics. The workshop will take place in a computer lab.

About the Instructor: Tom Daccord is co-Director of EdTechTeacher, co-author of Best Ideas for Teaching with Technology: A Practical Guide for Teachers by Teachers and author of The Best of History Web Sites.
