Course Description: Report Form teaches students to analyze underlying structure of expository text. This process employs questioning strategies that build independent study skills to assist in transferring to curriculum texts and test-taking. The curriculum teaches a process for identifying the subject of the report as well as sorting and classifying facts from reading selections. It then moves from subject to a process for identifying title, key facts, supporting details, sub-details, inferences, and categories. The curriculum materials include reading selections, graphic organizers, student practice sheets, and questioning strategies based on Bloom's Taxonomy.

Materials are included in the cost of the workshop.

About the Instructor: Nancy Raskind is a national consultant for the LanguageCircle[®]. She has been presenting Project READ[®] for many years. Previously, she taught for 21 years at the Carroll School for learning disabled students. Nancy also worked in the Brookline and Chelmsford Public Schools as a classroom teacher for grades four and five. In addition, she has worked as a teacher trainer at the Garside Institute for Teacher Training for 11 years. She has served on the board of the New England Branch of the International Dyslexia Association for two years. Nancy holds a B.S in Psychology from the University of Pittsburgh and a Masters in Education from Boston University.
